The Law School’s Dominican Republic Trips, initiated in 2002 and 2003 by Professor Larry Rafal, were conducted under the auspices of Creighton’s ILAC office, and took place over spring break week.

When Professor Rafal left Creighton Law in 2004, Professor Ron Volkmer, who accompanied Professor Rafal on his trips in 2002 and 2003, sought to re-institute the Law School’s connection to ILAC, with a specific goal in mind.

Professor Volkmer had been inspired by the words of Fr. Kolvenbach, Superior-General of the Society of Jesus, who, in his landmark Santa Clara speech to Jesuit educators, challenged the teachers at Jesuit institutions in declaring that:

“Personal involvement with innocent suffering, with the injustice others suffer, is the catalyst for solidarity which gives to intellectual inquiry and moral reflection . . . Students must let the gritty reality of this world into their lives, so they can learn to feel it, think about it critically, respond to its sufferings and engage it constructively. They should learn to perceive, think, judge, choose and act for the rights of others, especially the poor and the oppressed.”

Beginning in 2010, Professor Volkmer has been joined by Professor David Weber in the selection process of students, the preparation of students for the trips, while also serving as a co-leader of the immersion experience while the students are in the Dominican Republic.

The foremost goal of the experience is to have students exposed to all aspects of Dominican culture. This is accomplished by field trips in and around Santiago, that include the barrio of Cienfuegos, an office combating domestic violence, the cultural center, and the local Catholic university (PUCCM).

Trips are also taken to the border of Haiti (Dajabon), bateyes near Santiago, and to the north shore. The trip has usually concluded with a visit to the Capitol of Santo Domingo where students have had the opportunity to meet with the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Attorney General.

Students have visited four different Dominican jails as well as well as visits to four campesino communities where the students have performed service projects.

The ILAC Center in Santiago, which serves as the students’ home for one week, is best described by a sign that directs travelers to “MISION ILAC.”

Since the core of the experience is about “spiritual growth,” the students spend time in reflection and prayer in the St. Omer Chapel at "MISION ILAC.”

The Jesuits in residence at "MISION ILAC" have led the students in reflection and prayer, asking them to reflect on their shared experiences and to discern how they might be, in their professional careers, in solidarity with the poor and the oppressed.

From 2006 to 2012 some sixty students have made this amazing “journey of faith” and, for some, it has been, in their words, a "life changing experience." These are students who have let the "gritty reality of this world" into their lives with the result that they, in the best tradition of the Jesuit Volunteers Corps, have become "ruined for life.”
